In May 2022 Styles attended a Spotify launch for Harry's House. The title refers to home "in terms of a headspace or mental well-being," he told BH&G. The album is "by far the most intimate" he's done.

THE NEW ALBUM
The topsy-turvy cover of the May 2022 album Harry's House. Its first single, "As It Was," set a record for most-streamed song in the U.S. in a single day, with 8.3 million streams, according to Spotify.

WHEN HARRY STYLES stepped onto the stage of The X Factor in 2017—his first time back on the show following the breakup of One Direction—the dapper pop idol tore through a raucous rendition of his coming-of-age anthem "Kiwi," which chronicles one man's obsession with a girl who loves hard liquor and cheap cigarettes. It was a far cry from the baby-faced Styles of the X Factor boy-band sensation One Direction—and a refreshing evolution for this new King of Pop. Said Styles then: "It's good to be back."

His return to the venue that made him famous was a victorious one, but Styles hasn't been one to wallow in his own nostalgia. He's moved ever forward: New music (three studio albums and counting), unexpected movie roles (two in 2022) and a Grammy (for "Watermelon Sugar"). In the past five years he's come to embody a new kind of pop star: a champion of LGBTQ+ rights, a crusader for social justice, a fashion icon unafraid to mix the masculine (tailored suits, baggy pants) with the feminine (pearl necklaces, nail polish), a fundraiser for humanitarian relief and more.

It's a worldview best summed up by the phrase "treat people with kindness," which Styles has adopted as something of a mantra that would later become a centerpiece song on his album Fine Line. "[The phrase was on] a pin I had on my guitar strap, and we made T-shirts for it; then I saw a lot of T-shirts around," he recalled. "I'd be driving or something and see someone in one, and I started feeling like, 'Oh, this is a bit of a thing.' "

The person who's been by his side through this evolution? His girlfriend Olivia Wilde. After a series of romances, Styles has settled into a comfortable groove with the actress. The pair first met in 2020 when Wilde cast Styles in her 2022 movie Don't Worry Darling "[We] did a little victory dance when we heard that we officially had Harry in the film," Wilde told People. Their professional relationship became romantic (and the Internet lost its collective mind) when, in early 2021, the pair were spotted holding hands at a wedding in Montecito, Calif.

"I'm happier than I've ever been. And I'm healthier than I've ever been, and it's just wonderful to feel that," Wilde told Vogue in 2021 of her relationship. Since then, Wilde's often been seen supporting her beau at stops on his Love on Tour trek, and they've enjoyed downtime together on romantic vacations to Tuscany or bopping around Styles's home turf of London. They're also getting comfortable with each other's families: "Harry is slowly getting to know her kids, [and] Olivia is also spending time with Harry's mom," a source told People, adding that the pair "have a great relationship."

With Styles's personal life in full bloom, the star entered a new creative era with his 2022 album Harry's House, with singles he debuted at his first headlining performance at Coachella in April that year. For this happy-go-lucky kid from Cheshire, England, it's all about taking bold, creative risks going forward. "I just want to make stuff that is right, that is fun, in terms of the process," Styles told Better Homes & Gardens in a 2022 cover story. He added that he wants his work to be something "that I can be proud of for a long time, that my friends can be proud of, that my family can be proud of, that my kids will be proud of one day."

GROWING UP HARRY

THE MUSIC BUG BIT HIM EARLY. But it wasn't merely while listening to late-'90s radio as a lad in Northern England. As Harry Styles tells it, his initial exposure to the art form came courtesy of entertainment royalty from a bygone era: the King. "The first music I ever heard was Elvis Presley," Styles recalled to Rolling Stone in 2019. "When I was little, we got a karaoke machine, and I sang Elvis, because that's what my grandparents listened to." The influence of Presley on Styles was so great, in fact, that he even developed his own impersonation, which helped to combat his own stage fright. "He used to do quite a good sort of Elvis warble," his sister Gemma told Vogue in 2020. "He would sing in the bathroom, because if it was him singing as himself, he just couldn't have anyone looking at him!"

HARRY'S HOME
Styles grew up in the small English town of Holmes Chapel (above), population: 6,000. Born to Desmond and Anne Styles in 1994, Harry (right) was 7 when his parents split. "Honestly, when you're that young, you can kind of block it out," he has said.

A BRITISH GENT
"I wasn't like the most popular kid ever," Styles told Howard Stern in 2020.

THE CLASS CLOWN

Styles attended Holmes Chapel Comprehensive School. He's admitted that he was an "okay student; I wasn't bad," but that he loved to ham it up for his friends and teachers. "I was a bit of an attention-seeker," he's said.

Styles's childhood in Cheshire, England—where he was raised by his mother, Anne, and father, Desmond—was surrounded with musical moments like these. His dad would often spin records from favorite artists like the Rolling Stones and Pink Floyd, while his mom preferred pop stars like Shania Twain and Norah Jones. Outside the home, Styles's life was low-key: He attended the Holmes Comprehensive School and worked a side job at a local bakery, where he earned £6 an hour. And for a celebrity who's become one of the biggest heartthrobs of the 21st century, Styles wasn't necessarily his high school's prom king—or the best-looking boy in class, as he told Howard Stern in 2020. "I had a little more timber on me as well.… When you're 14 or 15, you've got a bit of that puppy fat going on."

While Styles's childhood was idyllic for the most part, his world was changed when his parents divorced in 2001. But while splitting his time between two households was something of an adjustment—his mom moved into a space above a pub the family owned—Styles always found silver linings, such as taking up guitar lessons. "One of the guys who used to play [at the pub] every so often, he used to be in Deep Purple or something… he started teaching me guitar when I was like 10—I think 10, maybe 9. I loved it," he said to Rolling Stone.

In grade school, Styles could often be seen acting in school plays like Chitty Chitty Bang Bang and Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. His first star turn? A mouse named Barney who lived in a church. "I remember it was crazy to me that I was wearing a pair of tights," he told Vogue. In fact, it was this production that would later inspire Styles to experiment with his trademark gender-bending fashion: "That was maybe where it all kicked off!"

WORKING-CLASS HERO
Before he became a star on X Factor, Styles logged hours after school and on weekends working at the W. Mandeville Bakery in Holmes Chapel, England. "He was the most polite member of staff we've ever had," Styles's boss Simon Wakefield has said. "Customers really took a shine to him."

Once Styles hit high school, he pivoted from theater to rock and roll and formed a band called White Eskimo, where he honed his chops as a lead singer, covering songs like Jet's "Are You Gonna Be My Girl" and Bryan Adams's "Summer of '69." "There was a battle of the bands going on at school," Styles told VEVO in 2012, "and we formed just for that, and we ended up winning!" His stint in White Eskimo also offered Styles the chance to sharpen his songwriting skills. His first original tune? "It was called 'Winter,' " he told Stern. "It's not the best."

Certainly his more or less unremarkable provincial upbringing did little to prepare Styles for a kind of fame that would explode to Beatlemania-level peaks. So what would the pop icon say to his 16-year-old self if he could now? "I guess like, 'Don't worry,' " Styles told NPR in 2020. "In the early years I spent a lot of time worrying about what would happen and getting things wrong and saying the wrong thing and doing the wrong thing. I'm trying to let go of the worrying thing."

LIFE OF LEISURE
"We'd ride our bikes and go to the driving range and stuff," Styles has said of his teenage years. "It was good, it was fun."

MAMA'S BOY
Styles credits his mother as one of his biggest inspirations. "Since I've been 10," he's said, "it kind of felt like… protect mom at all costs.… My mom is very strong. She has the greatest heart."

A STAR IS BORN
Styles's first taste of stardom came when he fronted the pop-punk band White Eskimo, which won a local battle of the bands competition.

HEAD-BANGER
Styles admits he wasn't an angsty teen, though he tried to act the part. "I had a phase of listening to really heavy music," he's said. "Not stupid heavy…just because I thought it was cool…I wore black all the time, pretty much."

ARMED WITH CHARM, ADORABLENESS AND CATCHY HOOKS, THE BIGGEST BRITISH TEEN SENSATION SINCE THE BEATLES HAD ONLY ONE WAY TO GO: UP

IN THE SUMMER OF 2010 HARRY STYLES, then 16, went to Manchester to audition for the seventh season of The X Factor—the U.K.'s biggest music-talent competition show. He had high hopes for making it far in the contest—the group he sang in with his schoolmates, White Eskimo, had already won a battle of the bands. And yet, when asked his plans for college, Styles told judge Simon Cowell that he would study "law, sociology and business."

He then sang an a cappella version of "Isn't She Lovely" by Stevie Wonder and, despite not impressing one of the three judges (talent agent Louis Walsh, likely now kicking himself), was put through by Cowell and guest judge Nicole Scherzinger. But in the boot-camp round that followed, Styles was cut and left the stage wiping tears with his knit cap. The rejection, he later said, was "the worst feeling of my life." Among those who could relate to that feeling were four other teen singing hopefuls on that same stage who had also failed to make it through to the next round: Louis Tomlinson, 18, Zayn Malik, 17, Niall Horan, 16, and Liam Payne, 16.

What Styles and the others didn't realize was that their initial failures would lead to unimaginable success: Shortly after they were cut from the competition, Cowell revealed that he had not given up on them. "I brought back these five guys, and I said, 'We're going to give you another shot, this time as a group,'" Cowell said. "When I saw them standing there for the first time as a group, something clicked. You could just sense that they had something." (For the record, both Scherzinger and Walsh have claimed credit for the idea of putting the lads together; Cowell disputes both narratives.)

Still, before a band could fully jell, the five individuals had to get to know one another. "When we got put together, we spent a week [at my house] not really working or practicing. We just kind of hung out for a bit," Harry told People in 2012. "We did that to make sure we became friends first, because now we don't really have to make an effort to get along—we just do." It was during that week that they came up with their band name. Harry suggested One Direction "because we were all going in the same direction as a group," Zayn explained in their book

Forever Young. (One name they rejected: Status Single—Liam's dad's idea.)

After doing their initial boy bonding, they started working on their boy-banding skills and wowed the X Factor judges—not to mention the show's millions of viewers—week after week, making it all the way to the finals. Their performances of songs including Coldplay's "Viva La Vida," Kelly Clarkson's "My Life Would Suck Without You" and Elton John's "Your Song" earned them high praise. "You've got all the ingredients for the perfect pop band," judge Cheryl Cole, a U.K. pop star, told them after their first live performance. "I reckon the girls at home will be going crazy for you." 1D's members were having the time of their lives offstage too—sharing a room and sleeping in bunk beds, unwinding after rehearsals with games of Ping-Pong, getting the chance to meet several of their music idols and hitting up glitzy movie premieres.

Then, as the season came to a close, the boys learned once again that success doesn't always come the way you think it will. Although the group didn't end up winning The X Factor, moments after they came in third, Cowell called them to his dressing room and made their dreams come true: He offered them a record deal on his own label. Looking back, Harry could hardly believe what they'd accomplished in their six-month X Factor journey. "It's been a lot of laughs and a lot of haircuts!" he said. "We've come so far since then."

By the time the group performed at the Nickelodeon Kids' Choice Awards in March 2012, One Direction had amassed countless fans, including some famous ones. "I love them! I love them!" Taylor Swift told People after watching them sing. "Me and all of my friends were so excited—we had an all-out dance party when they were up there. I just loved it!"

That kind of intense passion (usually paired with screaming, tears or even fainting) built steadily for the boy band. Though they didn't arrive in the U.S. until 2012, for many fans, they needed no introduction: Savvy teens had discovered them online long before they became international celebrities. "We owe a lot of our success to Facebook and Twitter," Zayn said. "A lot of our fans are on there. That's how we connect with them."

As a result, when their debut album, Up All Night, was released worldwide in March 2012, it landed at No. 1 on the Billboard 200—a history-making feat for a British group (yes, that includes even the Beatles). At the BRIT Awards (the U.K.'s version of the Grammys) that year, they edged out the seemingly unbeatable Adele to win Best British Single (for their song "What Makes You Beautiful"), a prize determined by fan votes. Tickets to their December 2012 concert at New York City's Madison Square Garden sold out in less than 10 minutes. And when they were scheduled to perform on Saturday Night Live, hundreds of fans spent several nights sleeping on the sidewalk in an attempt to get tickets to the show. "We haven't seen this kind of boy-band mania since 2002," Billboard editor Joe Levy said. "This is state-of-the-art pop music buffed to an even higher gloss than usual."

That was One Direction's goal, to set themselves apart from their pop-chart predecessors. "We're trying to do our own thing," Liam said. In Zayn's words, "We're five normal lads: We're not massively ripped, we don't have amazing bodies, and we freely admit we can't dance." And yet somehow it all worked. "A year ago we would never have expected any of this stuff that's happening now," Harry told People during the band's rise. "We just want to keep working hard, making sure we keep on delivering the best we can, having fun, and we'll see what happens."

What happened was a relentless pace and success: In five years they put out five albums, went on four world tours. On March 25, 2015, Zayn Malik, then 22, announced he was leaving the band. The remaining four soldiered on but soon agreed that a break might not be a bad idea. One of their final singles, 2015's "Perfect," seemed to address that moment. "That song, more than anything, is about the way the fans have created this massive thing—One Direction—over the past five years," Payne told EW. "Out of that comes a little bit of closure for this chapter, I guess." But for the band's standout star, the story was just getting started.

THE CALL FROM STEVIE NICKS came one night in 2019. The rock legend was in London for a string of shows and wanted to grab some dinner with her pal Harry Styles. He had inducted Nicks into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame that year—and Nicks, who found solo stardom outside of her work with Fleetwood Mac, would often counsel the former One Direction singer on navigating his career. When Nicks told Styles she wanted to hear material from his just-finished second album, Fine Line, he was surprised: "I'd never really played her [my] stuff before," he told The Howard Stern Show in 2020.

With some trepidation, Styles took Nicks and her friends back to his apartment, where they listened to his new tunes until the wee hours. "They left at like 6!" Styles said. "The sun had come up. I was exhausted!" As ever, Nicks had constructive criticism about his album. "She thought the first single was wrong and she thought a song that didn't go on the album, should go on the album," he recalled. "I definitely thought about [her advice]. And then the feeling for me becomes, well, if I wanted it this way, and then she told me to change it, and I didn't, I must really want it this way."

Trusting his own instincts has been the secret to Styles's emergence as one of the biggest solo stars of this century so far. Since One Direction went on indefinite hiatus in 2015, he has released two critically acclaimed No. 1 solo albums, won numerous awards—including a 2021 Grammy for Best Pop Solo Performance ("Watermelon Sugar")—landed roles in big-budget movies (Christopher Nolan's World War II epic Dunkirk) and evolved into a boundary-pushing fashion icon.

> —HARRY STYLES TO DAZED MAGAZINE

Not bad for a North English lad who auditioned for The X Factor on a lark. "I wanted to step up," Styles told Rolling Stone in 2017 about going it alone. "There were songs I wanted to write and record. Every decision I've made since I was 16 was made in a democracy. I felt like it was time to make a decision about the future … and maybe I shouldn't rely on others."

Styles put that independence to the test in 2016 when he ventured to Jamaica for nearly two months to write the music for his self-titled debut album. The star had just wrapped up filming Dunkirk and needed to blow off some steam. So he found refuge at Geejam Studios, where megastars like Rihanna and Drake have also recorded. There Styles and his crew of music pals hunkered down, binged Nicholas Sparks rom-coms (one of his favorite movie genres) and enjoyed morning swims at the beach. It's also where Styles cultivated the musical vision for Harry 2.0: "To have time to live with a song," he told Rolling Stone, "see what you love as a fan, chip at it, hone it and go for that … it's heaven."

The LP was an instant success, debuting at No. 1 and becoming one of the Top 10 bestselling albums that year. So it makes sense that Styles would follow his instincts once again when he began work on 2019's Fine Line—only this time, Styles and his musical collaborators ventured further for inspiration. "We'd do mushrooms, lie down on the grass and listen to Paul McCartney's Ram in the sunshine," he told Rolling Stone of those recording sessions in California. He also started delving deep into Transcendental Meditation—and such explorations into spirituality helped him unlock a new level of awareness. "That moment where you really let yourself be in that zone of being vulnerable, you reach this feeling of openness. That's when you feel like, 'Oh, I'm f---ing living, man.' "

Styles's joie de vivre was dampened when the COVID pandemic sent the world into lockdown. The remainder of his world tour in support of Fine Line was canceled, and the star spent much of quarantine in a pod with friends. "At first it's like, 'Oh, we're all in, and we get to watch movies and eat burritos,' and live the kind of meme life," he told Apple Music's Zane Lowe in 2020. "And then you speak to people around the world... and for them it's really scary. There's... people dying every day."

But ever one to see the silver lining, Styles—a vocal proponent of anti-racism and LGBTQ+ rights—used the time to grow even further. "I've been trying to read and educate myself so that in 20 years I'm still doing the right things and taking the right steps," he told Vogue. "I believe in karma, and I think it's just a time right now where we could use a little more kindness and empathy and patience with people, be a little more prepared to listen and grow."

RAINBOW WARRIOR
Styles (in New York in 2018) has long championed the rights of the LGBTQ+ community and often waves a Pride flag during his shows. "Gay rights are fundamental, not political," he said in 2017.

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN
Styles (with hordes of adoring fans, of course) braved the elements to perform "Adore You" and "Kiwi" live on the Today show in New York City in 2020.

HARRY'S OLD-SCHOOL INFLUENCES

HIS SOUND IS WHOLLY HIS OWN, BUT STYLES' MUSIC HAS ROOTS IN CLASSIC ROCK

He may be a millennial superstar, but he's an old soul down deep. Since coming into his own, post-One Direction, Harry Styles has taken musical and style cues from music forces of yore, from low-key singer-songwriters like Van Morrison and Joni Mitchell to flamboyant icons like Prince and David Bowie. "A lot of my influences and the stuff that I love is older," Styles told Rolling Stone of his grab-bag of inspirations. "But I'm not saying I wish I lived back then. I wanted to [make music] that sounds like me. I just keep pushing forward." Here, a few of his idols.

ELTON JOHN
Styles re-created the Rocket Man's iconic sequined Dodgers uniform (inset) at a Halloween party in Los Angeles in 2019.

DAVID BOWIE
Above: Rock's greatest chameleon inspired Styles to write the fan-favorite song "Treat People With Kindness." Said Styles: "I'd seen this clip of David Bowie talking, saying that you usually end up doing your best work when you feel like you can't quite touch the bottom."

PETER GABRIEL
After decamping to Gabriel's Real World studio near Bath, England, to record music for his second solo album, Styles has since worked the Genesis alum's 1986 hit "Sledgehammer" (song video, above right) into his repertoire. "It's the best mixed song ever," Styles told Howard Stern.

PINK FLOYD
Classic British bands like Pink Floyd (right), the Beatles and the Rolling Stones influenced the retro-rock vibe of Styles's debut album. "All the stuff I grew up listening to," he's said.

JONI MITCHELL
"I was in a big Joni hole," Styles told Rolling Stone of the singer-songwriter (right), whose 1971 LP Blue inspired his Fine Line. Mitchell, who had a 1975 song called "Harry's House/ Centerpiece," tweeted "love the title" when he announced his 2022 album.

ELVIS PRESLEY
Below: As a boy, Styles honed his music chops by imitating the King of Rock and Roll's rangy baritone.

THE DUNKIRK INTERVIEW

ON THE OCCASION OF HIS FEATURE FILM DEBUT, HARRY STYLES AND COSTAR FIONN WHITEHEAD SPOKE TO PEOPLE ABOUT MAKING THE WWII EPIC

BY KARA WARNER

One had performed in front of sold-out stadiums. The other was working in a coffee shop less than two years earlier. But in 2017 both were first-time movie stars—and after their grueling shoot playing British soldiers desperately fleeing a French beach in Oscar-nominated director Christopher Nolan's World War II thriller Dunkirk, Harry Styles and London-based actor Fionn Whitehead shared a brotherly rapport. They also shared a newfound appreciation for hot showers.

What was your favorite day on-set?

STYLES There were a couple when we were just out in the water all day that felt like they were the most rewarding when they were done. During, they were the worst days.

WHITEHEAD I find it really funny that [crew members] kept running in with warm coats, but we were covered with water. So they'd give us these warm coats, and then we'd get the inside wet and then we'd put them back on and they'd be all slimy.

STYLES Yeah, [it was] freezing cold. We'd be out on the boats, and it'd be us and extras and stuntmen and stuff like that. It turned into everyone huddling together to stay warm. I think that kind of stuff was some of my favorite. It was pretty instinctive.

Did it give you a new perspective?

STYLES Yeah! I think it gives you the perspective of someone who gets to take their uniform off and go home and shower and go to bed. The people who were [really] there didn't, and they were being shot at and slept in those clothes and woke up and did that stuff the next day. It gives you a newfound appreciation for . . . showering, for one.

WHITEHEAD The minute anyone complained, someone would pipe up, like, "Well, at least you weren't there." And then everyone would feel really bad and crawl away to a hole somewhere.

How did you spend your downtime?

STYLES I slept most of it. I'd say 90 percent of what wasn't filming I was asleep. I mastered the sleep-swim. I definitely fell asleep while floating [during filming] a couple times. It was nice, refreshing.

WHITEHEAD We both managed to find a way to fall asleep on demand. If there was a five-minute break, we just turned over and zzz. I think you're the best at it, actually. I'm pretty good, but you're the best at falling asleep.

Fionn, do you have a favorite Harry Styles song?

WHITEHEAD I heard a bit of one. I don't know the name of it. I've heard your songs. I like them!

STYLES Thanks, man. Thank you.

I guess this means that Harry isn't prone to break into song on-set?

WHITEHEAD I'm pretty sure you sang a bit on-set.

STYLES There's no chance!

WHITEHEAD You sang words, though. You didn't really sing songs. You just sort of sang, "Hello!" or "Good morning!"

STYLES More of a spoken word.

Have you thought about your next steps?

STYLES I don't think so. This was such an amazing experience, and I feel very lucky to have been able to be a part of it. I don't think you can really think too far ahead with anything.

WHITEHEAD I just want to keep acting, reading scripts and seeing what I like. Harry, would you do another movie?

STYLES I'd do this one again.

Dunkirk 2?

STYLES For sure.

WHITEHEAD Dunkirk: The Return.

STYLES I don't know if that's part of the story. ■

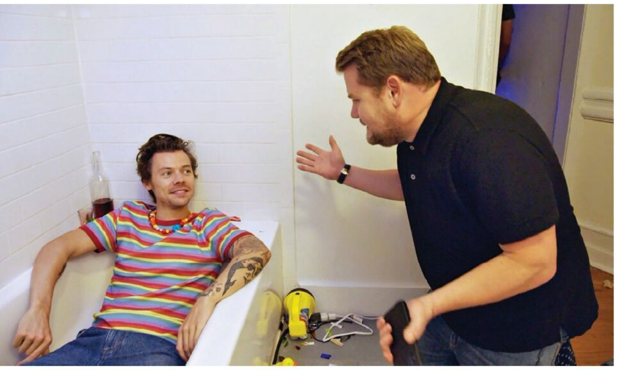
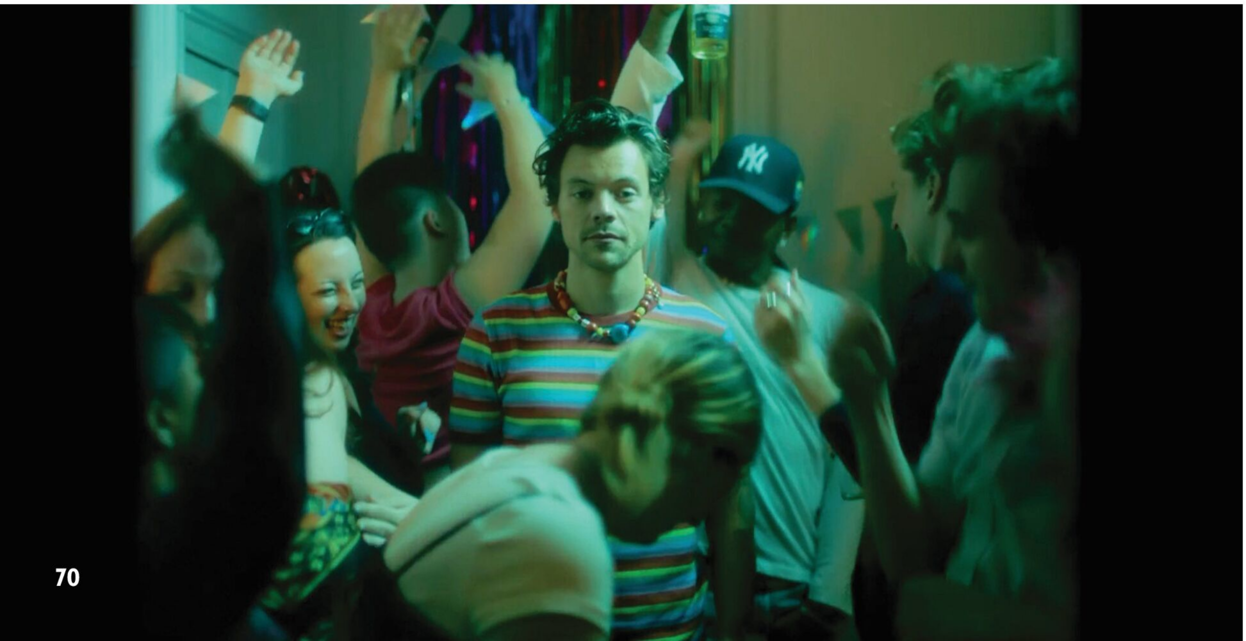
HARRY HITS THE LATE LATE SHOW!

LATE-NIGHT TALKING
Styles is an unofficial regular on pal James Corden's show. In 2019 while acting as substitute host, he played "Spill Your Guts or Fill Your Guts" with Kendall Jenner, whom he had previously dated. (Styles ate cod sperm rather than reveal which of his songs was about her.) Below: With three hours and a $300 budget, Corden and Styles shot a video for his 2022 single "Daylight," on location in the Brooklyn apartment of four very surprised roommates, who appear in the impromptu party scene.





THE Late Late SHOW with JAMES CORDEN

STYLES STEPS UP
As a last-minute fill-in for new dad Corden in December 2017, Styles ably hosted a holiday-themed installment of "Dogs in Sunglasses." "I have to be very honest," he said. "This is not exactly how I saw my day panning out."

BEHIND THE BADGE
In My Policeman, expected out in 2022, Styles plays a married, closeted gay cop who has a long-standing affair with an older museum curator (David Dawson, with Styles at right). The Crown's Emma Corrin (below, left) portrays Styles's schoolteacher wife, who must contend for her husband's heart in 1950s England, where homosexuality was still criminalized. The film is based on Bethan Roberts's 2012 novel, which was inspired in part by the real-life affair between Howards End novelist E.M. Forster and policeman Bob Buckingham.

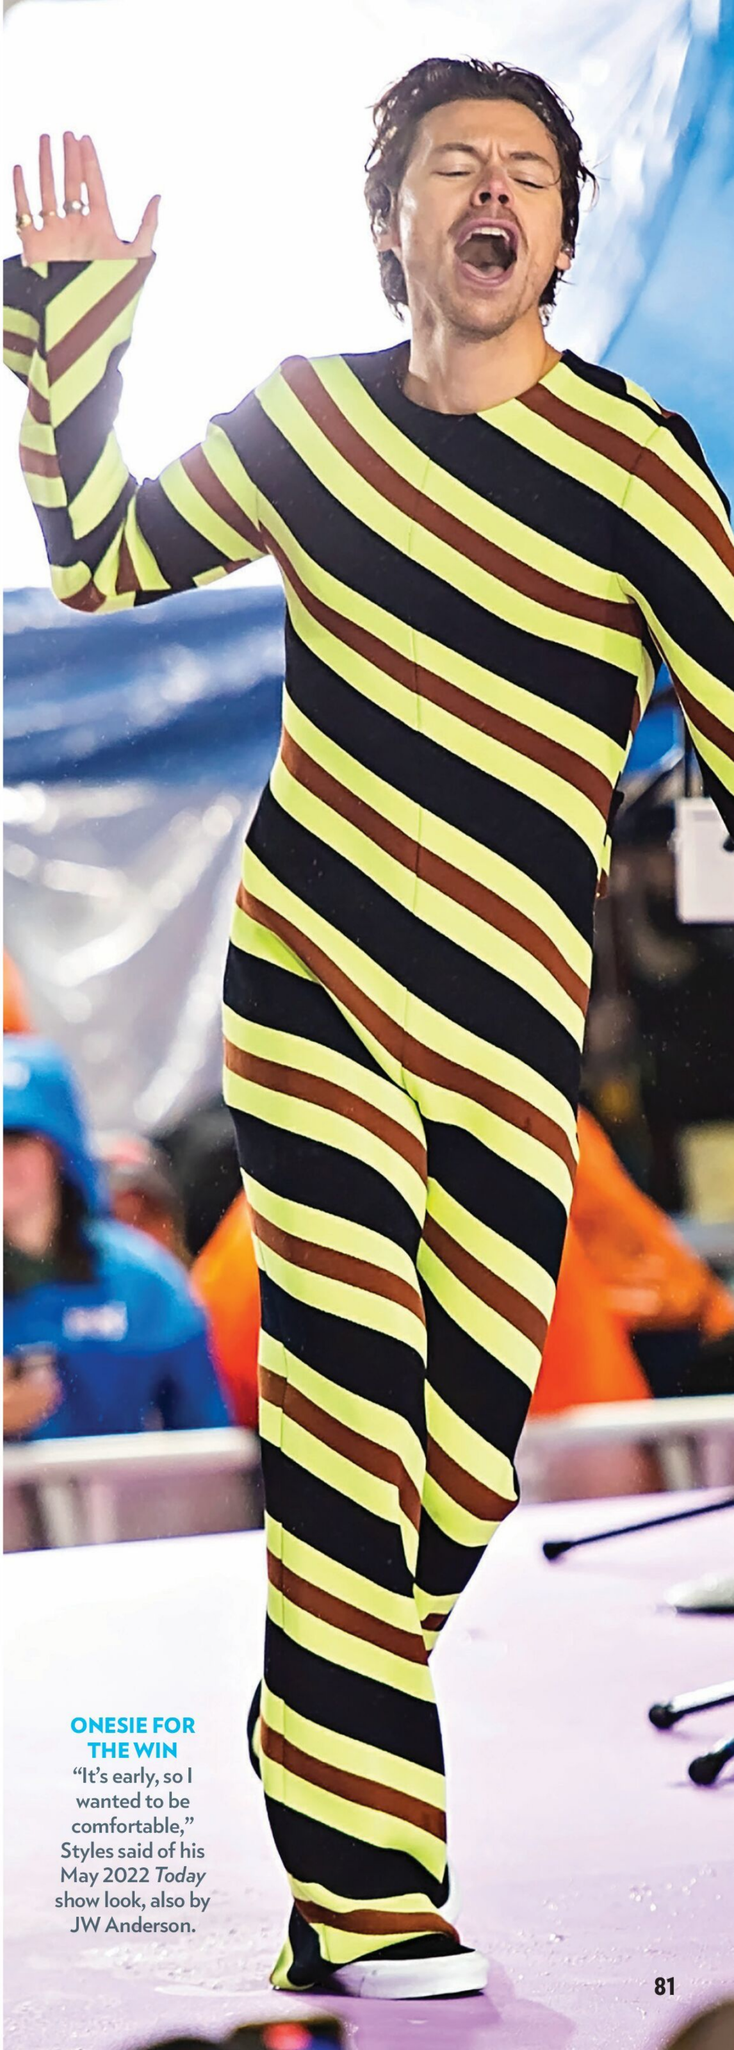
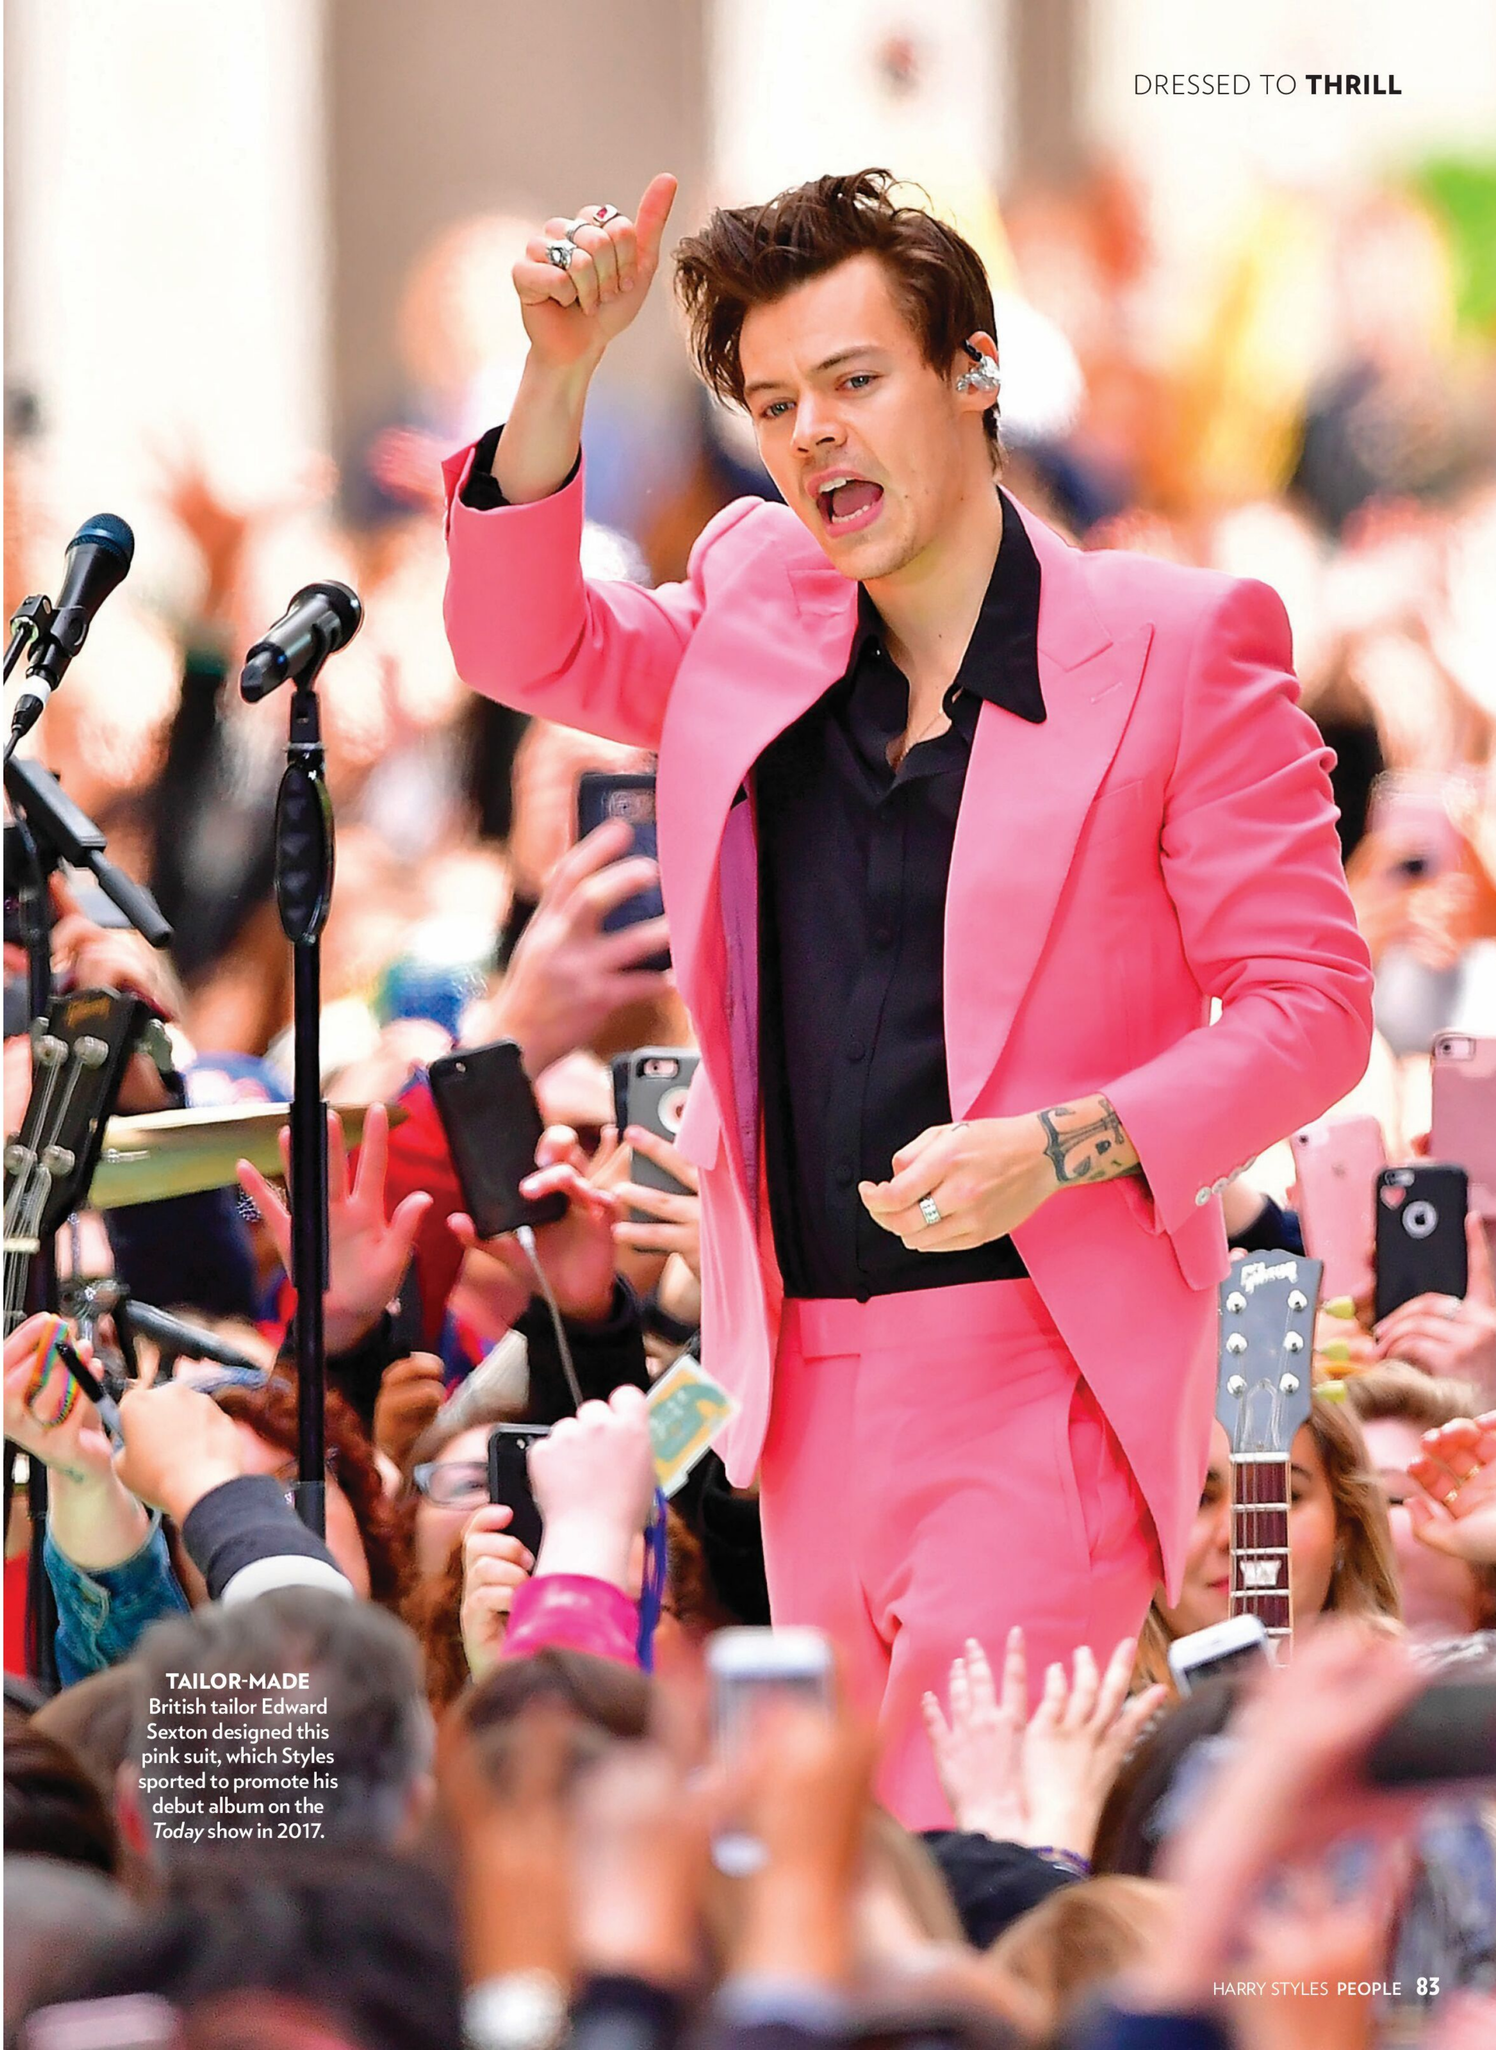
PATCH IT UP
After Styles wore this sweater by JW Anderson on the Today show in 2020, it sparked a viral TikTok challenge in which fans shared homemade versions using the hashtag #harrystyles-cardigan. In 2021 JW Anderson auctioned off the design as an NFT for $7,500. The original is now in the Victoria & Albert Museum.



ONESIE FOR THE WIN
"It's early, so I wanted to be comfortable," Styles said of his May 2022 Today show look, also by JW Anderson.

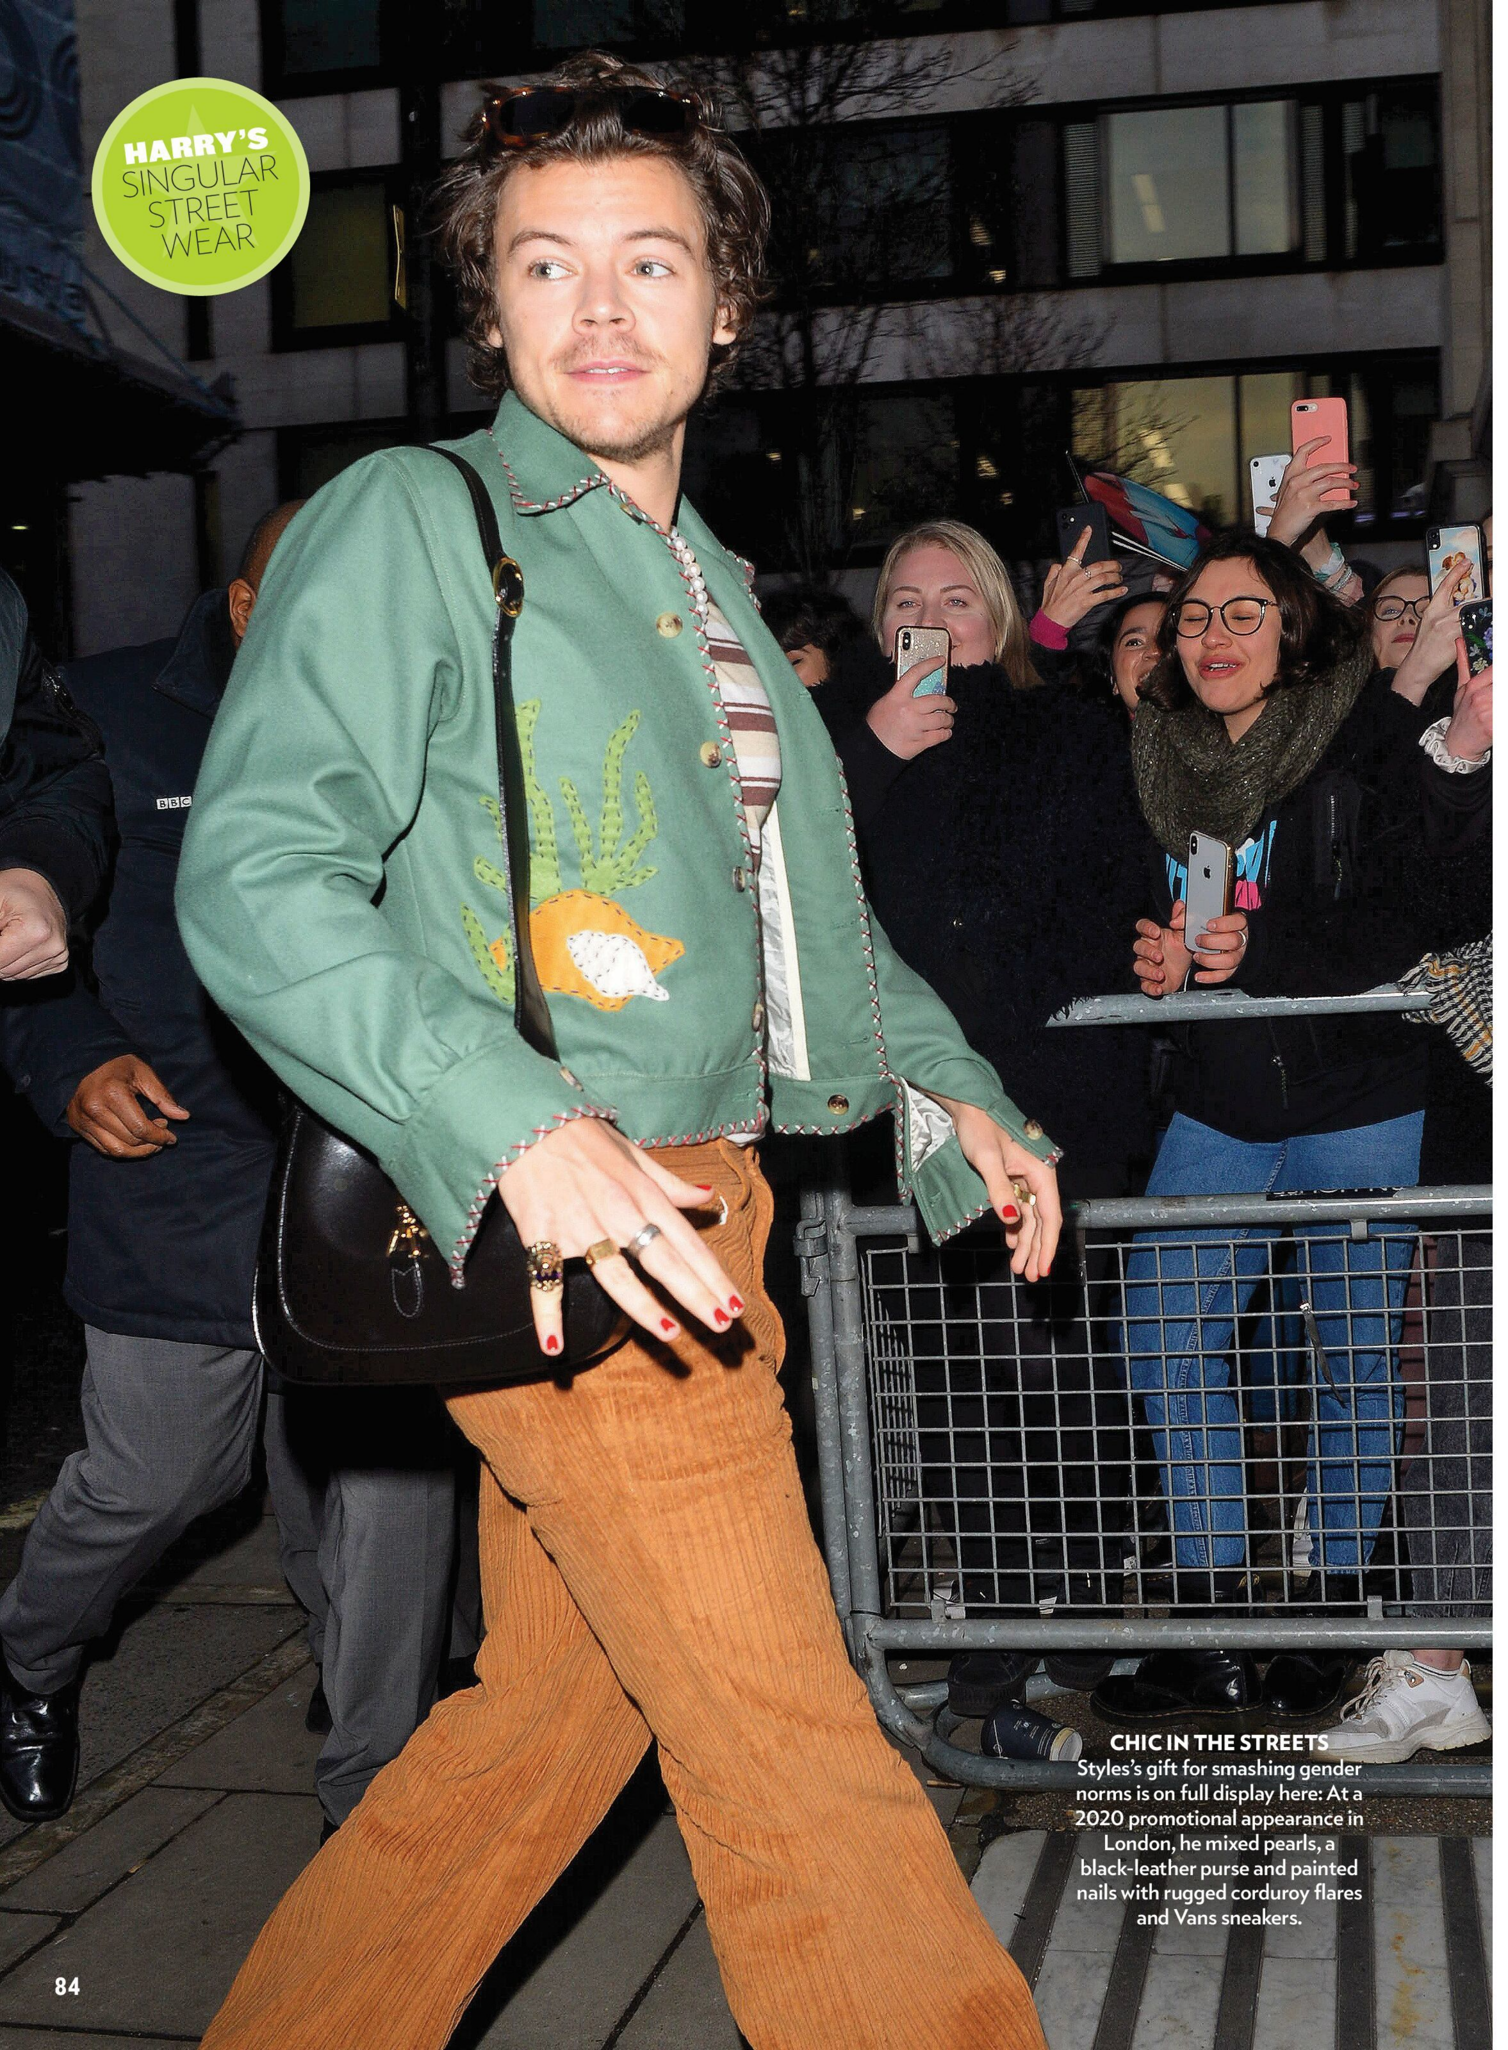
PEARL JAM
Styles (at the BRIT Awards in 2020) has in recent years adopted pearl necklaces as his go-to accessory.

PURPLE REIGN
Perhaps in a nod to Prince, one of Styles's admitted style icons, the star sported an iridescent paisley suit designed by Alexander McQueen to Australia's ARIA Awards show in 2017.

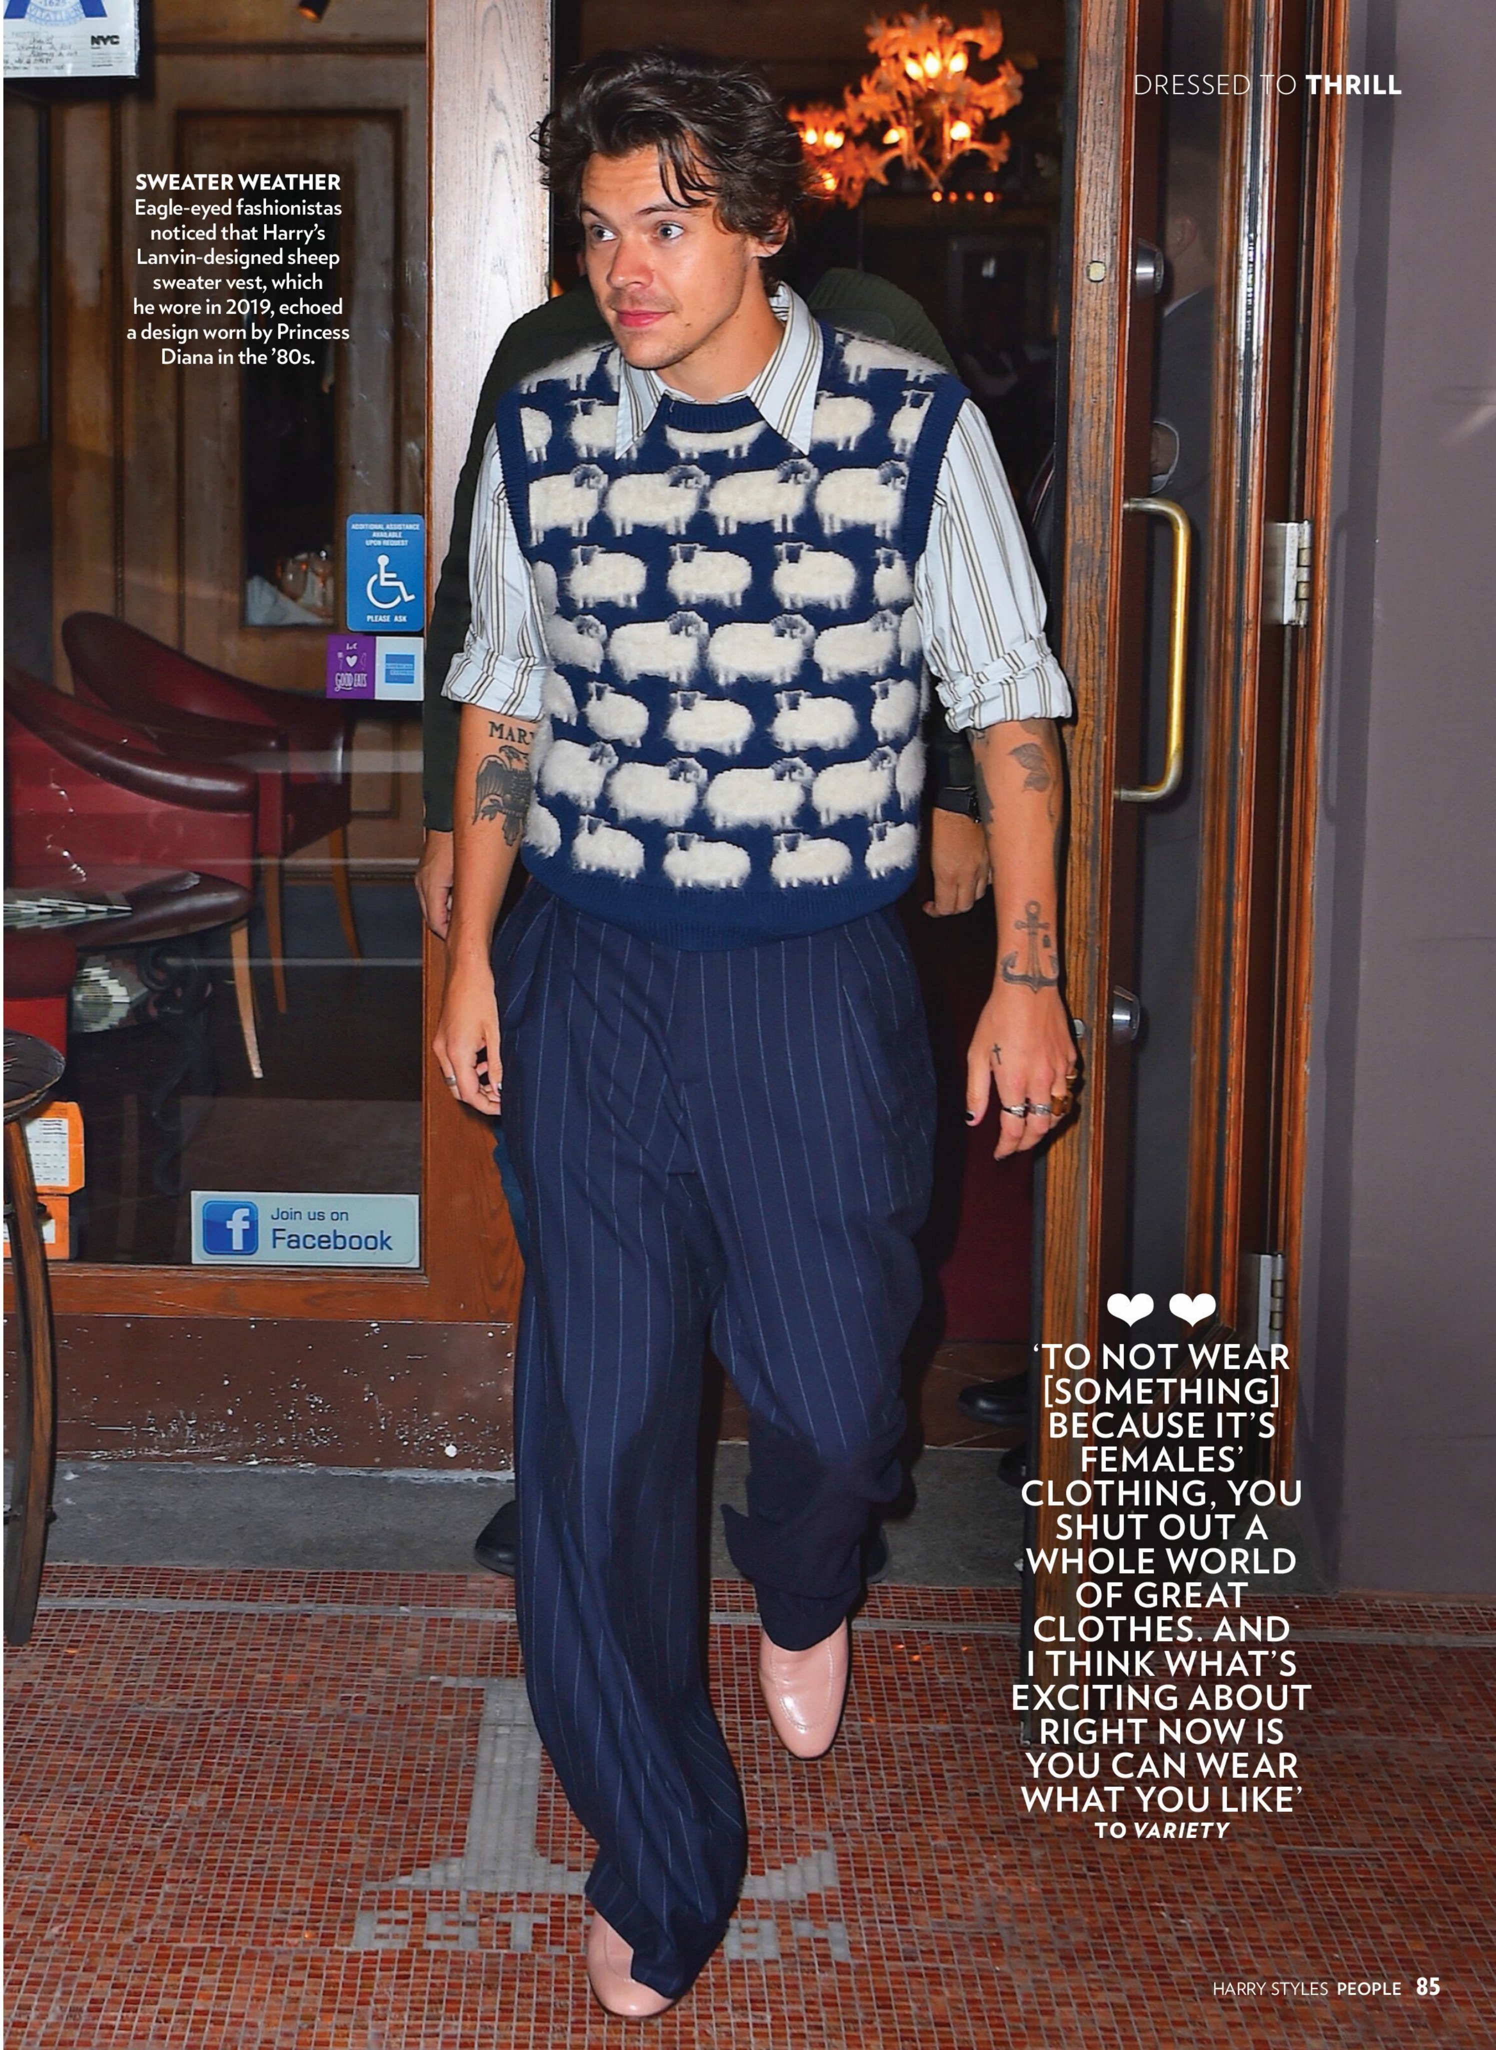


TAILOR-MADE
British tailor Edward Sexton designed this pink suit, which Styles sported to promote his debut album on the Today show in 2017.

HARRY'S SINGULAR STREET WEAR



CHIC IN THE STREETS Styles's gift for smashing gender norms is on full display here: At a 2020 promotional appearance in London, he mixed pearls, a black-leather purse and painted nails with rugged corduroy flares and Vans sneakers.



SWEATER WEATHER Eagle-eyed fashionistas noticed that Harry's Lanvin-designed sheep sweater vest, which he wore in 2019, echoed a design worn by Princess Diana in the '80s.
